THE work of the reconstruction of the Praya Wall is now approaching completion, and the Surveyor-General may be congratulated upon having at length almost achieved this most important work. Fortunately for Colony has for more than five years enjoyed a complete immunity from typhoons, and thus a good opportunity has been afforded for accomplishing the very necessary work of restoring the sea wall. It is not the fault of the Colonial Office Authorities that The Hon. J. M. PRICE has, we know, done he had some vague idea that the city of Victoria was exposed to the full swell of the open sea, and that therefore the wall, as proposed, was insufficient for the purpose. The usual correspondence and the inevitable delays through the red-tapeism of the Colonial Office ensued, and thus time went on and this great work was postponed from month to month, and year to year, regardless of the anxiety of those interested in the property it remains to be seen how the new wall will have been continued along the front of the naval and military property, connecting. with the Praya East at Wanchai. As a matter of fact the Prays should at the outset have been made continuous, both for public convenience and in the interests of property, which in the Eastern district suffers to some extent by being in a measure cut off from the water frontage.. The water between the Boat House of the Recreation Club and the Blue Houses is very shallow; and could be reclaimed at a comparatively small coat and the Naval and Military establishments need not be put to any great inconvenience by the Praya being carried in front of them. The scheme has frequently been mooted, we believe, but it has never been seriously entertained, the expense and other obstacles standing in the way. If, however, the city a Chromo-lithograph Plate of the CODE of continues to progress and increase in size it may become a question for consideration whether this extension of the Praya is not both necessary and likely to pay for the cost, It contains a DESCRIPTION of and by the spread of population and capital

We have several times already drawn attention to the danger resulting to the public peace from this agglomeration of people without personality, whose names, professions, and residences change each instant according to the needs of the moment: whom no one, even in the police, can fistter themselves to be able to discover if their companions think well to cause them to disaupear or f they themselves choose to lose themselves inthe mass of the floating population. ... When, then, will it be decided to take serious measures to assure the identification and surveillance of these individuals? All over the world the progress of and dangers resulting from this invading race are seen; everywhere measures are being taken to oppose the former and to impose the common law on the individuals. When will Cochin-China do as other countries, and defend its native inhabitants against these invaders? On this subject we have urged the re-establishment of the system of letters of residence, bearing the photographs

PROFESSOR HUXLEY ON THE DAR WINIAN THEORY. The discourse at the Royal Institution was lelivered recently by Professor Hoxley to a provided audience. The title of Professor Huxley's discourse was "The Coming of Age of the Origin of Species," and its object was to inquire what were the grounds of the remarkable change of apinion in favour of the theory propounded in Mr. Darwin's book since its publication, nearly years ago. Setting himself to examine the cause of this change, the lecturer said that our acceptance of any proposition depended on two factors, the one being the state of mind to which the evidence was offered, and the other-unfortunately the subordinate factor generallythe nature of the evidence itself. As regarded the Darwinian theory, it would be found in the first place that in the year 1859, when the Origin of Species" was published, the state and; in the second place that the evidence of the truth or falsehood of the main proposition contained in that work was totally different that year from what it was now. The progress of geological investigation in the past quarter of a be seen at once by any one convergant with the are entirely composed of cabbage and beet leaves, history of solence to be, as it were, the natural supplement of Sir C. Lyall's principles of geclogy. These principles were that we must explain the conditions of the past by those of the present. Darwin's book was the application of the same principle to the phenomena of organic ife. The essential foundation of his book lay in the propositions that the innumerable species. genera, families of organic beings with which this world is peopled have all descended, each within its own class or group, from common parents, and have all been modified in the course of descent, and that all the existing orms of life are lineal descendants of those which lived before the Silurian enoch. If these propositions were true, the book that contained them was the most considerable contribution to biological science since the time of Harvey: if false, the rest of the book was of no consequence. In 1859 it was objected to Mr. Darwin's theory that it got over difficulties by assuming a process of animal extinction for which there was not a shadow of a ground of evidence. It was true, then, that we knew of no sort of natural ransition between birds and any other creatures n the animal kingdom. But new science had traced the precise stages of a transition from eptile forms to bird forms. There was a perfect series of these transitional forms. Investigation had also filled up the apparent gap between vertebrate and invertebrate animals. Since 1859. also, acientific investigations had shown how utterly impossible it was to draw a line of demarcation between lower animal or lower vegetable life. While in 1859 Mr. Darwin could speak of the imperfect record of palesontology as being his chief. difficulty, it was now possible for palecontologists to paredy a well-known saying and to declare that if evolution had not existed it would have been necessary to invent it. As matters now speculation, it was historical fact. When, therefore, the anniversary of the publication of the that it remained for them to do was to congratulate the venerated author of this work on the doctrine he had propounded won for himself a place beside our Harvey, but that he had the singular good fortune to outlive storms of envy and detraction, and to see "the stone which was

Up till Friday last (says the World of April 21) Lord Beaconsfield still held to the hope that he might have an opportunity of crowning the Imperial edifice, by declaring in Parliament while still a Minister of the Queen the latest success of his policy in Europe and in India; and the little hirds in Downing street whisper that Prince Leopold was able to show Royal reasons against such a course. It may not be generally understood that Prince Leopold has, in a minor sense succeeded to the post of affectionate adviser held by the Prince Consort. But it is a fact, nevertheless.

The Journal of Applied Science draws attenion to a statement that has recently been made to the effect that in Thuringia, in Germany, over ,000 tons of dried bestroot leaves are anually passed off as genuine tobacco. Beetroot, chicory. and cabbage are largely used for a similar purpose in Mag loburg and in the Palaticate. The 'Vevey" cigars, which are in such favour in South Germany, contain no tobacco at all, but deprived of their natural smell and taste by a pecial form of cultivation, and subsequently

He said that in some instances this influence had the effect of raising nomedic races to the level of the Bussian peasantry, but it destroyed their national and religious unity, paralyzed their industry, and greatly engendered immorality. Russia was monopolizing their trade, and by taxation was stripping the Asian peasant to supply the Imperial exchaquer.
